

Humans are the biggest threat
to the survival of frogs...

<http://web.esc20.net/access>

Britannica

Username:

Password:

EBSCO

Username:

Password:

“Humans are the biggest threat to the survival of frogs. In some countries frogs are killed because people like to eat frog legs. The most serious threat to frogs, however, is the destruction of the ponds and rain forests where they live. Another danger is water pollution. Because frogs and other amphibians absorb water through their skin, they face especially serious risk when chemicals or other harmful substances are released into water.”

Quote Source: "Frog." Encyclopædia Britannica. (2008). Encyclopædia Britannica Online School Edition.
<<http://school.eb.com/eb/article-9035479>>.

Image Source: Keifer, Cathy. "A baby red-eyed tree frog is perched on a plant stem." Online image. Shutterstock Image ID 16047835.
<<http://www.shutterstock.com>>.

The K-12 Databases program is funded by the state of Texas and is available at no cost to Texas public school communities through a partnership between the Texas State Library and Archives Commission, the Texas Education Agency, and Education Service Center, Region 20.

<http://web.esc20.net/k12databases>